

Gregg G. Van Ryzin, PhD, is professor in the School of Public Affairs and Administration at Rutgers University-Newark, where he directs the PhD program and also co-directs the Center for Experimental and Behavioral Public Administration. He has interests in both survey research and experimental methods and conducts empirical studies on a range of topics, including citizen satisfaction with urban services, coproduction, performance measurement, nonprofit organizations, housing policy, and comparative public opinion about government policy and institutions.

*Prof. Van Ryzin is widely published in scholarly journals in public administration, policy analysis and urban affairs and is author (with Dahlia Remler) of Research Methods in Practice (SAGE, 2011/2014).*